

ABSTRACT

A method for dynamically authenticating an executable program, that is the continuation of the instructions defined thereby, is performed repeatedly during the very execution of the program. The method for making secure an electronic portable object through execution of a program supplied by another insecure electronic object uses, inter alia, a secret key protocol.